

Abstract

We study perfect equilibria of finitely repeated games which are immune to the possibility of "renegotiation" among players. The limiting properties of the set of payoffs from such equilibria are derived and the results contrasted with the "perfect folk theorem" for finitely repeated games.